

School rules

Children should not start school until the age of six: that's the conclusion of a major education review. The report claims delaying formal lessons will ensure that children who struggle at the age of four or five are not put off education for life. Should schooling start at a later age?

guardian.co.uk, Friday 16 October 2009 10.43 BST

Children at pre-school nursey. Photograph: Voisin/Phanie/Rex Features

Should children start school at a later age?

79.8%

Yes - four is too early

20.2%

No - education can't wait

This poll is now closed

Comments

In order to see comments, please turn JavaScript on in your browser.